Pay transparency report

Background

Employers with 50 or more employees in British Columbia are required to post an annual pay transparency report by November 1, 2026. This report is prepared and posted in accordance with that regulation.

The required methodology for calculating pay gaps compares employee pay by gender across the entire organization, and does not take into account whether employees perform similar work, hold similar roles, or have comparable experience or tenure. The law also requires suppression of gender-category data where there are fewer than ten employees in a category. As a result, the report does not fully reflect the context behind pay differences or representation across the company.

NLG recognizes that pay transparency is an important part of building trust and accountability. We remain committed to fair hiring and pay practices, and to continuing to assess and improve how employees are evaluated and compensated based on role, skills, and experience.

Data constraints

The visible data may give the impression that the two highest-paid quartiles are composed entirely of men, which is not the case. Women and employees of undisclosed gender are represented in those quartiles, but cannot be shown under the required reporting rules.

Explanatory notes

9. "Pay quartile" refers to the percentage of each gender within four equal sized groups based on their hourly pay.

* In accordance with the Pay Transparency Act and reporting rules designed to protect the anonymity and privacy of respondents, one or more gender categories has been excluded due to insufficient numbers to meet disclosure requirements.
